

Puppy skin care – what should you know?

Puppies get dirty very often because of their youthful awkwardness and lack of dexterity during endless games.

Proper care of their coat during puppyish age influences its condition and beautiful appearance in the following years. First of all, puppy shampoo must be very delicate, so that it does not affect the pH of the skin and does not cause irritation or allergic reactions.

In puppies you should not use cosmetics intended for adult dogs, or worse, for people.

and coat in puppies and kittens

The basic rules when bathing a pet

Warning! It should be remembered that before the tenth week of life, bathing a puppy is forbidden.

The puppy is still too small, there is no adequate resistance, and its skin and coat are not adapted to even the most delicate cosmetics.

- 1 The bathtub should be covered with a non-slip mat, thanks to which the dog feels safer.
- 2 The bathing water should have a temperature similar to that of the dog's body, that is approx. 38 - 39 °C.
- 3 Before bathing, it is worth to brush the puppy, which will allow the shampoo to reach the skin better over the entire body surface.
- 4 Bathing should start from the tail area and gradually move towards the head. Head should be washed with extreme caution or completely skipped, to prevent the penetration the ears, eyes, nose or mouth by shampoo.
- 5 After the first rinsing of the foam and removal of external dirt, the operation should be repeated.
- 6 Massage the foam for about 5 - 10 minutes.
- 7 When wiping your pet, do not rub the fur, just drain them off, even with a few towels.
